Chapter 1 by Michelle Franzen

Rain fell into large puddles gathering on the streets as she sat gazing out her window. The rain mirrored the tears that fell down her face. They had been married 14 years and she was still struggling to accept it was over. She hadn't told him yet.

As she began to openly weep, she dropped the paper from her hands that held the loving words he had written to the woman he had been secretly seeing. She knew he was out with her this very night. As the weeping continued the pain turned into anger. How could he do this to her? After all she had done for him - all she had sacrificed! She was worth so much more than this!

She jerked her head as she heard the door shut downstairs. He was home. It was time to confront him. She wasn't sure which would take over her when she spoke to him. She hoped it was the pain because she was afraid of what would happen if the anger overpowered her.
